A Business Continuity Case Study

Established London Law Firm

The Challenge

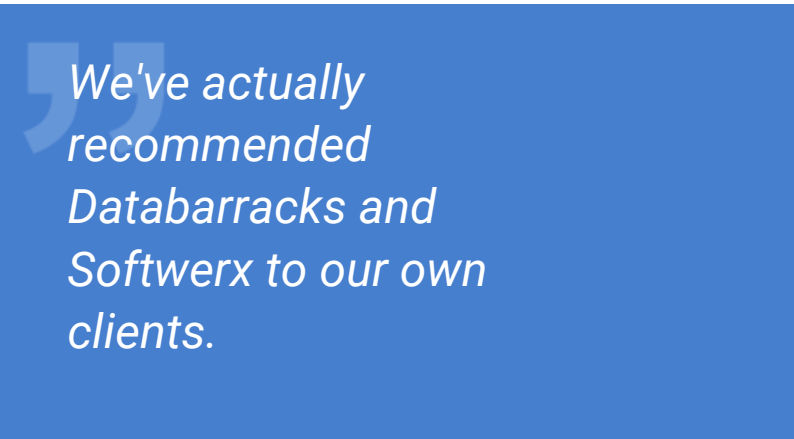

The firm had a myriad of disparate backup solutions, technology and suppliers, all promising to keep them up and running in case of emergency.

However, they were not confident that the solutions would work together if something went wrong and no individual option would be enough to ensure business continuity.

The Solution

The firm undertook a significant research project to ascertain what would be the best solution to unify their business continuity approach.

They found Databarracks and were delighted with the software solution but needed someone to manage the implementation and ongoing support. Databarracks recommended Softwerx to provide that support.

We've actually recommended Databarracks and Softwerx to our own clients.

The Outcome

The solution implemented uses enterprise level backup and restoration software and the data is stored physically in a nuclear military bunker.

The business now has a business continuity solution they can trust to get them up and running again in case of an emergency.

They have been able to simplify their solution and reduce the cost by consolidating with one, reliable supplier.
